It was Black Friday, and Esperanza Quinones was out picking out a few things.

In her bag were some essentials. A couple of blouses. A comforter. A pair of boots.

“I only take what I need. I don’t take what I don’t need,” she said.

Quinones’ Black Friday experience was not spent going shoulder to shoulder with shoppers at the mall, but in the parking lot of Kate’s Kitchen at Providence Ministries for the Needy on Hamilton Street. There, she and several others
